SERVICE CLASSIFICATION NO. 7 (Continued)

SPECIAL PROVISIONS

- A. Standby Demands Larger Than 1000 kW: All customers with Standby Contract Demands greater than 1000 kW applying for Service under this Service Classification are required to provide the Company with an annual schedule of OSG maintenance by October of the preceding year for each subsequent year. This schedule will be provided at the time of subscription to this Service Classification and will be utilized for planning functions. Schedules must include starting and ending times for all planned outages. Customers will be allowed to update their schedules one month prior to their effective dates. After this time has passed, no modifications will be allowed to the schedules, unless Company approval is granted. This provision does not take precedence with respect to any OSG maintenance provision in a power purchase agreement which may be in place with the Company.
- B. SC-4 Customers: Customers who would otherwise receive service under the provisions of Service Classification No. 4 shall have their demand measured on an integrated 30 minute basis, pursuant to the terms of that tariff.
- C. Compliance With Reliability Criteria: Customer agrees to comply with any existing or future criteria, guidelines, and procedures established by the North American Electric Reliability Council (or its successor) to ensure the continued reliability of North America's interconnected secured transmission electric systems.
- D. Electrically Isolated Loads: In the event that any customer elects to Electrically Isolate (as defined in Rule 1.48) some or all of the facilities at the Customer's Location and to thereafter serve such facilities with electricity from on-site generation without connection to the Company's system, the isolated portion of that customer's load will not be subject to S.C. No. 7 provided that the customer executes an agreement with the Company that provides for the following:

The Company will be entitled to inspect the electrical configuration of such facilities upon a customer's request for this exemption.
